The Indiana University Robert H. McKinney School of Law invites applications for Lecturer in Legal Communication and Analysis.

The lecturer position is a part-time position. Lecturers are expected to teach approximately 15 to 20 first-year students in Legal Communication and Analysis, which is a year-long course. In the first semester, lecturers will teach students how to analyze legal issues and write objective memoranda. In the second semester, lecturers will teach students persuasive writing and oral communication. Responsibilities include teaching inside the classroom and in one-on-one student conferences, reviewing outlines and/or drafts, grading papers, and providing input on course assignments. The course is a graded, two-credit course each semester.

Applicants for the position must demonstrate a strong academic record and strong writing skills. Applications consisting of a cover letter specifying the applicant’s interest in the position, a curriculum vitae, a law school transcript, a writing sample, three references, and teaching evaluations (if available) should be sent to Professor Jim Dimitri at jddimitr@iupui.edu. Applications must be received by May 14, 2018.
